30. They drilled holes. The curious fuckers had bore the ground for their ends. No one questioned the bonny metal hoods dotted here and there, especially in the poorer neighbourhoods. Part of the sanitation? A system keeping us clean? Innocuous! Forgettable! But the holes went straight down into the dark chambers. They craved to see what would happen if it lived among us. 34. Carl, broken Carl, was found dead with open eyes and bloodied hands with the pick also wet with blood. The wall was hewn, yes, and the tiniest hole is made into the chamber. Through the hole drips a liquid so dark it is almost black - it is it definitely a dull and slow silver. The liquid (is this goo?) can be seen smudged around the lips of the body [notes: Carlsbad influence]

35. The dust settled. The hum was gone. The doorframe supported nothing, only itself. Looking through it, to the outside, whatever that was, I could see the emaciated pigeons pecking at grains of broken glass. There was nothing else I guess. But looking closer, I saw something else in between the shards. They weren't eating the glass at all. They clucked and scraped at flesh

36. I feel like I am so close to getting answers. If I continue to hew away at this wall I will find what I seek. I can hear the hum, and if it is silent enough, if I press my ear to this cavern wall, The wall bulges and vibrates. It must be the goo. They said it was gone but I know it isn't. I can hear it burbling all of the time. Any quiet moment is full of noise. It's not in my head. Not in my head

37. Little boy little boy they are here to squash your joy little girls little girls they are here to cut your curls

38. There were several instances where we were in church, well, after church, and it happened. I can't quite explain it, but it happened. At first we shrugged it off, we even giggled about it. And then it happened again. The third time it happened, we all froze. What is the probability of this occurring? Marginally tiny, we were sure. We remained silent after that, too stunned to speak.

39. Exhausted as I was and with the ringing in my ears, I couldn't make out all the words of their anthem, sung quickly as it was. There was mention of 'blades' and 'Hollus'

40. I'd met her on the West Edge of the Rustbowl. She looked at me like I was both meat and an old friend. Nothing would happen outside the 'bowl of course but after the rounds had died we retired to her apartment. We talked a little, laughed a lot as she lit the gas under the kettle. A few minutes later as the whistling stopped, I noticed her hand still clamped to the hot kettle. She still laughed

43. She looked up at the smokestacks, their blood starting to dry under her fingernails. It had been two or three hours since what had happened - had happened. The ravishing of them. The reaving. Even with the time, her heart beat quickly as theirs rested. The three men lay mangled and opened around her. This smoke always rises, she realised for the first time. It finds a way up and up. It climbs.

45. And then there were 'the boat people', the gaggle of four that only hung around together. Elliot and Tessa-Sarah, Gary and his father Dan. All except for the woman are heavily bearded, all smoke heavily. There are no (functional) boats here in Chisel Town but it is said they used to ride the still waves together. In more ways than one, if all accounts are to be believed

46. That tickling pain, nowhere near the surface and at a level just below perceptible, gnawing at the inside of your skull. It picks your cheeks. It scours your elbows. The pain that hits so so hard on the back of your knees that you hardly know why you started moving forward again. That pain is shattering and addictive. And that is why we've stayed here all this time. It's why we'll die here

47. We were, and are, a group with a shared interiority complex. The weight of what we were doing could only be shouldered by us - no eyes need pry until our conclusions were discovered. What bonds what would our practice make? And what bonds would it break?

[25]J. B and D. H, "The Rustbowl [working title]." 2035.

48. Did anyone bother to ask why the CT tunnels have been closed to the public for the last 7 years? Town hall has no answers- only that they were "closed for improvements" and thereby "under construction". Why, moreover, are there guards standing by outside of each entrance?

49. Slowly, we realised that they were one and the same - that they both wielded the same power. Storytelling is the act of successfully - or unsuccessfully - commanding attention. The attention may be focused on the teller, yes. But it may also be directed AWAY from another story that should not be told; not yet and perhaps not ever

51. The water isn't contaminated in any way - but owing to the desert passing nature of the place, the most popular drink is a 'Sol' or 'Set of Lizards'. My palette being that of a mere journalist I couldn't separate the ingredients - but there was something that gave the impression of ginger in the follow through, something sharp, something hot

52. It was, of course, a sad name for a DJ in a landlocked town nestled under the shadow of the clouds. DJ Steps to the Beach held the graveyard shift of the darker Rustbowl events that went on for longer than anyone expected. And to be clear, much like The Papacy, DJ Steps to the Beach reincarnated once and again, always growing old and never being witnessed during youth

53. And with these latest experimental results? In short, we were crazed with longing, insane with desire. If you're running down a platform toward the open door of a moving train and you're SURE that your leap will land you safely aboard, you leap. This is faith. But we were still, obviously, crazed. We were consciously insane

[25]J. B and D. H, "The Rustbowl [working title]." 2035.

54. Once we have chiseled away at all of the fluff, all of the corruption, all of the layers—what will remain? Are we doomed to be trapped in this provincial routine? Should we instead turn the chisel on our selves and crack into what lies beneath our earthly visages?

58. There is a resident called Bob Sweeney - There is a seaside

59. YES A SEASIDE and a valley with strange ancient crop circles. The valley is too narrow for any standard sized unidentified flying crafts (UFC). The beings came from - underneath?

60. I overheard one say: “We all have our crosses to bear, fine. But think on this and stay quiet. Say we lash all of our crosses together. Maybe that starts to look like a ladder to heaven?”

61. Across the United States, Iceland, Scotland and parts of China (and indeed the wider sphere, whatever is left), ‘portals’ are nothing new. But regulation around portal operation is fierce, dense and tedious. Had the Mayors of Chisel Town erected all this whimsy around a blackmarket, bootleg or even DIY portal? No, that couldn’t be it… For what end?

63. And when your society is built around a people that have discovered everything, what is left? What happens to curiosity when the only thing left to discover is the remainder of your life? Or indeed, what is right? What is up? What gets you down? And so we get down - In The Rustbowl

65. The dances at the Rustbowl are always long, starting early in the afternoon and ending sometimes a day or two after. They whirl and wheel until an agreed upon ending. Nearly all of the residents attend. But I find myself asking: what happens when the town is empty at these times? And what happens when the Rustbowl is empty? Does 'goo' lie beneath or outside The Rustbowl?

68. One day there will be no stone left and we'll walk on the sand we've made. And then, mercy! We can rest

69. This is one more whack of the chisel obviously

70. For these last weeks I have been trying to understand the distinction between 'blood' families and 'soil' families. From what I know thus far, the labels are mutually exclusive

[23]D. R. H and J. M. B, Sharp Looks in Chisel Town. 2038. [Online]. Available: https://chisel.town

71. It seems that families in Chisel Town may only converse and socialise after attendance and "cohesion" at The Rustbowl dance. This is true for any family unions or marriages and even matters as banal as borrowing a lawnmower. No dance: neither dalliance nor deal. I should clarify: everyone here is part of 'a family'. This need not be a 'blood' family, as they are known

76. and the reason for the rust? goo.

[25]J. B and D. H, "The Rustbowl [working title]." 2035.

77. well obviously testing and experimentation must be conducted. we are not only collecting various samples of goo, of rust, or the dust on the rust. we are also experimenting on the current generations residing in Chisel Town as well as the following three generations. what we are attempting to prove is that the goo, rust, and dust bear little to no effect on the residents' health and happiness.

[25]J. B and D. H, "The Rustbowl [working title]." 2035.

78. But we're not sure of the specific mechanism or relationship between the rust and the goo. Are you sure? No I thought not.
